Consultation on Position Paper

Review of Regulation of 'Railway Systems Activities'

THE Environment Protection Authority (EPA) is seeking comments on a position paper which proposes amendments to the current regulatory framework for railway systems activities under the Protection of the Environment Operations Act 1997.

The EPA undertook a review to determine the most effective framework to regulate the impacts of rail construction and operational rail activities on the NSW environment and community. The review identified that the current regulatory framework has not achieved the level of on-the-ground benefits for the environment and the community that had been intended.

The EPA is proposing changes to the regulatory framework to address this. Key changes include introducing a requirement for rolling stock operators to hold environment protection licences, separating rail construction activities from rail operation activities and introducing a threshold for environment protection licensing for rail construction projects.

The position paper is open for comment until 8 October 2014. For a copy of the position paper and to provide comments please visit the EPA website at: www.epa.nsw.gov.au/licensing/railindustry.htm
